

Coalition for a European HIV Response joint statement

Europe has the tools and knowledge to end HIV as a public health threat, yet progress is stalling and, in some areas, reversing. New HIV acquisitions and AIDS related deaths are rising, inequalities persist across and within Member States, and agreed targets remain out of reach. At the same time, community-led organisations that are central to prevention, testing, treatment access and human rights are being weakened by shrinking funding and declining policy attention.

EACS – as a member of the Coalition for a European HIV Response alongside the International AIDS Society \(IAS\) and community organisations from across Europe – supports this joint statement as a call for urgent political action.

It sets out why the current trajectory is not inevitable but the result of policy choices, and urges the European Parliament, the European Commission and Member States to renew leadership, secure predictable and sustainable investment, and place community leadership at the heart of Europe's HIV response, in the EU and globally.
