Now available: article on HIV prevention knowledge among healthcare workers in Europe and Central Asia

Knowledge about biomedical HIV prevention among healthcare workers: A cross-sectional study in Europe and Central Asia is now published in HIV Medicine.

The study explores healthcare workers' knowledge of key HIV prevention tools—including U=U, PEP and PrEP—across 54 countries in Europe and Central Asia.

Findings from over 18,000 respondents reveal significant knowledge gaps, with only 31% demonstrating correct understanding across all three areas. The study also highlights factors associated with improved knowledge, such as experience caring for people with HIV and prior training on infection control and HIV-related stigma.

The results underscore the need for targeted training to support effective and equitable HIV prevention, treatment and care in the region.
